

Introduction to Volume 4, Issue 2

Deanna Shemek and Arielle Saiber

As we present this open-themed issue of California Italian Studies, we acknowledge and thank our many collaborators. These include, first, a great number of generous, anonymous outside reviewers. Their critical expertise is traced—albeit in invisible ink—on every page herein. In addition we thank our two managing editors, Rossella Carbotti (PhD candidate, UC Berkeley) and Aria Dal Molin (PhD candidate, UC Santa Barbara), whose intelligence, energy, and grace under pressure made it possible to handle the high number of submissions CIS receives. Thanks also go to Regina Longo (PhD UC Santa Barbara) for crucial technical advice at the beginning of our work process. We thank our copy editors, Ariane Helou (PhD candidate, UC Santa Cruz), Sarah Kaplan (PhD candidate, UC Santa Barbara), and Marina Romani (PhD candidate, UC Berkeley). For keeping our finances in order, we thank our UC Berkeley colleagues, Albert Ascoli and staff members, Elizabeth Lavarge-Baptista, Moriah Van Vleet, and Laurie Holland. Our gratitude also to the technological staff at the University of California's eScholarship and California Digital Library, which host and archive California Italian Studies.

For crucial financial support, we gratefully acknowledge the Italian Department at the University of California, Berkeley, which contributes substantial funding to the CIS enterprise. We also thank the UC Humanities Network, the UC Office of the President, the UC Humanities Research Institute at the University of California, Irvine, and the deans of seven campuses of the University of California: at Berkeley, Los Angeles, Davis, Riverside, San Diego, Santa Barbara, and Santa Cruz.
