

City Kids

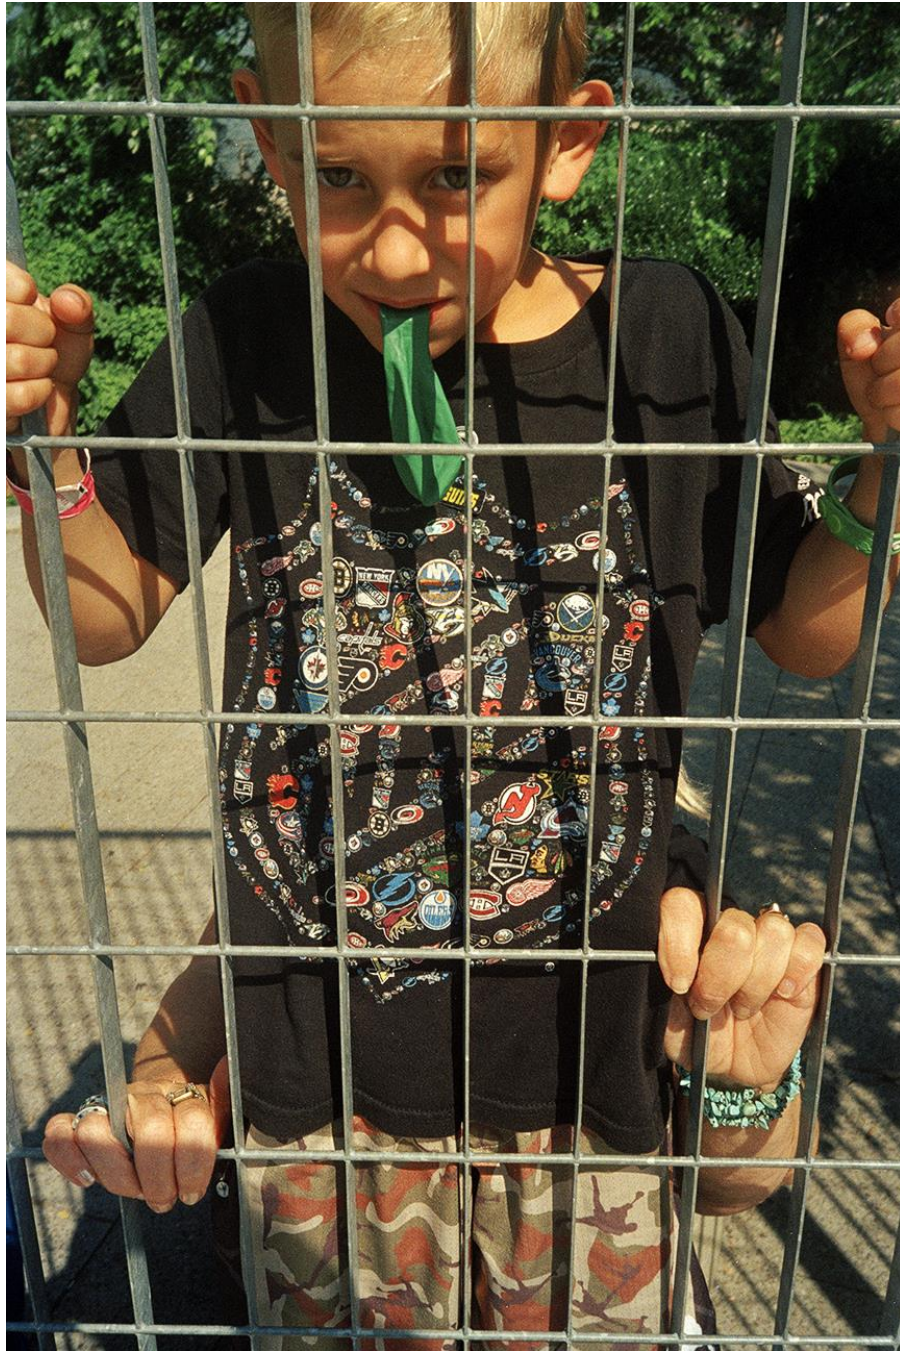

Aaron Breetwor

Photographs

More and more, ours is a world in which the content of life is projected onto surfaces. There are fewer physical spaces that encourage play, questioning, and investigation. Thought processes are cornered—sequestered into different applications. We draw fewer connections, relying on external services for answers. Our sense of cause and effect is muddled by dancing light that responds to each tap, pinch, swipe, and tilt of panes of glass. Some moving images even disguise themselves as windows. In this low-friction existence, today's children must situate themselves—many without the blessings of a skinned knee.

About the author

More information on Aaron Breetwor can be found at: aaronbreetworphoto.com