

PREFACE

This issue of The Black Law Journal is the product of many hours of hard work by Black Students and Black Faculty at Northwestern University School of Law in Chicago. The articles presented herein were submitted to the Journal in the form in which they appear. We hope that this effort will encourage other Black Law Students at other law schools to undertake similar efforts. The Journal is anxious to provide a forum for Blacks in the legal profession whenever and however it can. We encourage the submission of articles from individuals and from groups such as this.

In Volume IV, immediately after this issue, the Journal will publish the proceedings of two symposia of special interest to our subscribers, the affirmative Action Conference held at Harvard University in October of 1974, and the Workshop of the Section on Minority Groups of the Association of American Law Schools "DeFunis and Beyond: Testing the Nation's Will", held in December, 1974. These special issues of the Journal should be reaching you very soon after the commencement of Volume IV.

The Journal has always enjoyed the participation and the cooperation of the Center for Afro-American Studies at UCLA and is happy to announce an expansion of that cooperation by administrative and clerical support from CAAS. We know that this will enable the student staff to serve you, our subscribers, in the most efficient manner possible.
