

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

In a voluntary effort such as this there are truly many people to thank for its ultimate success. I am greatly indebted to the Georgetown chapter of the Student Bar Association for providing us with the initial funds and to the Georgetown chapter of The Black American Law Students Association (BALSA) for financial and moral support. Mark Jensen, Administrative Assistant to the Dean is to be thanked for arranging suitable office space for our staff. I should especially like to thank David Wilmot, Dean of Admissions of the Law Center, without whose help this issue could never have been published. Thanks are also in order for the Dean of the Law Center, David J. McCarthy.

Burt Lockwood, Associate Dean of the Washington School of Law provided me with many leads as to possible authors for this issue and his assistance was invaluable.

Linda Tiggs and Professor Marilyn Ainsworth of the Executive Board are greatly appreciated for the encouragement, sustenance and know-how which they provided. Added thanks is extended to Beth Cox Williams and David Alleyne of the University of Kansas School of Law for their editorial assistance.

Nor can I forget the time, patience and valuable criticism and judgment afforded me by my Consulting Editor, Professor Henry Richardson, III.

I must thank my husband, Ronald, and my son, Chaka, for their patience and support; and finally, many thanks to my entire staff, with special thanks to Miss Jacqueline P. Minor, staff member, who never spared any effort to make this issue a great success. Finally, very, very, special thanks are in order for William Bowman, former Managing Editor of the Georgetown University Law Journal for all of his help.
