

distinct relationship to the endorphins. This linkage, as are the others described previously, is quite logical and not without substantiation.

In summary, this is a well-written, interesting, and provocative work. Regardless of your own research specialty, you will find the knowledge gained to be well worth the time you invest in reading. Should you desire to go further, the references for each chapter have been carefully and thoroughly documented.

Stephen F. Davis
Department of Psychology
Emporia State University
Emporia, KS 66801
U.S.A.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF REVIEWERS

We wish to thank the following colleagues who reviewed manuscripts submitted for Volumes 1 through 3.

The Editors.

Abram Ansel	Graham Davey
Henretta Band	Stephen Davis
Graham Bell	Michel Delsaut
David Berger	Francesco Dessi
M. E. Bitterman	Francois Y. Dore
Charles Blaich	Lee Ehrman
Suzanne Bloch	Joel P. Eigen
N. Robert Brandon	Leonard Eiserer
Robert Brush	Robert Elliot
Thomas Cadwallader	Ira Feit
L. Caillere	Charles Flaherty
Nancy Caine	Josephine Flood
Douglas Candland	Roger Fouts
Sheila Chase	A. Gallo
Bernadette Chauvin	Jean Pierre Gautier
Mary Lou Cheal	J. Gervet
Anne Sophie Cismaresco	Marjorie Goldman
John Clegg	Lincoln Gray
Dennis Cogan	J. Ch. Guyomarc'h
Robert Cook	Gary Guyot
Patricia Couvillon	Jack Hailman
David Croft	Elliot Haimoff
Davide Cszerhely	Arthur Harriman
Martin Daly	Henry Hefner

Louis Herman	Dan Moriarty
Gordon Hodge	Alberto Panerai
Kathryn E. Hood	Maureen Powers
Nancy K. Innis	Michael Renner
Rudolf Jander	Paolo Renzi
Jiro Kikkawa	William A. Roberts
William Langley	Lesley Rogers
J. M. Lasalle	Thelma E. Rowell
G. Le Boucher	Ian Rowley
Peter Lennie	Duane Rumbaugh
Janet Leonard	Jean Philippe Rushton
Joan Lockard	Alexander Skolnick
Sandro Lovari	Charles N. Stewart
Wayne Ludvigson	Delbert Thiessen
Euan M. Macphail	Roger K. Thomas
Peter Marler	William Timberlake
Jennifer A. Mather	Charles Tolman
J. Medioni	T. Edgar Walters
Emil Menzel	Edward Wasserman
M. C. Meunier Salaun	Fred Westerbrook
Egidio Moja	Robert Zettle