

UCSD UNDERGRADUATE LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 3

SPRING 2025

ARTICLES

Facial Recognition in Policing: How Algorithmic Bias Targets People of Color Velmar Amador-Lankster	4
Enhancing Fund Governance to Combat Greenwashing in ESG Securities Under Delaware Law Firas Qureshi	31
Analyzing Accountability: Examining the Domestic and International Redress Measures for War on Terror Detainees Taylor Spencer	76
Weak Enforcement, Flawed Procedure, Dangerous Precedent: Analyzing the Effectiveness of International Law Through the Lens of the South China Sea Dispute Grace Ha	104
Equal Protections in the Age of AI: Navigating Civil Rights in Housing with Machine Learning Mehri Sadri	130
Constitutional Boundaries: The Endurance of Birthright Citizenship and the Future of US-born Children of Undocumented Immigrants Zhenee Presa	152
Playing by the Volcker Rule: How Deregulation Threatens the Firewall Between Banks and Risk Joshua Kao	175
Challenging the Constitutionality of the Zero-Tolerance Policy on Immigration Frida Luna	203
Overfitting and Copyright Infringement: How Should Copyright Law Address the Italian Plumber Problem? Elaine (Linghui) Zhao	227
Redefining Rights: The Case For Limited AI Legal Personhood in Intellectual Property and Genetic Engineering Madison Corliss	252

UCSD UNDERGRADUATE LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 3

EDITORIAL BOARD

SPRING 2025

Editor-in-Chief

Chloe Burrows
Rachel McChesney

Managing Editors

Theresa Rincker
Shyan Khan
Luciné Gezalian
James Rivera
Elina Mohan

Business Team

Keiko Dickens
Grace Miller

Editors

Vismaya Sista
Aadyant Suresh
Dalea Tran
Eshwari Gundi
Tara Vatandoust
Frida Luna
Adcharapon Wang
Laura Ortiz
Stephanie Yeh
Aditya Khare

FOREWORD

We are excited to present the third volume of the Undergraduate Law Review at UC San Diego. Over the last year, we have been fortunate in recruiting and connecting with a select group of talented student authors and editors who embody the qualities of legal scholarship and excellent research. This third volume amplifies their exceptional achievements through diligent work and commitment to fostering legal discourse.

Volume III compiles work focusing on the intersection between the law and new AI technologies, international relations, and modern political topics such as climate, immigration, and economic issues. Our members' legal insights stem from diverse majors, backgrounds, and experiences. Their articles demonstrate the strengths of undergraduate publications at a research university—interdisciplinary topics and new insight into complex, ongoing legal controversies.

We would like to express our profound gratitude to Professor Nichter for her guidance during the writing process, connecting us with peer reviewers, and providing resources that allowed our organization to flourish. With her support, our writers have developed foundational skills that will be eternally useful as they pursue a career in law. Research insights and tactics provided by Annelise Sklar in the early stages of the writing process were invaluable to developing these papers. We extend our gratitude to the managing editors who oversaw these articles and to the writers and editors dedicated to creating novel arguments about fundamental legal issues. This volume would not have been possible without their hard work and passion. Finally, we express our deepest appreciation to our members for dedicating hours of their time while balancing busy schedules to produce impactful legal articles. We believe their dedication will be evident to any reader.

Chloe Burrows and Rachel McChesney
Editors-in-Chief
UCSD Undergraduate Law Review – Volume III