

CONTRIBUTORS :

- C. C. Aniakor, whose print appears on p. 106, is a lecturer in painting and African art history at the University of Nigeria, Nsukka. He specializes in the mythology of the traditional art of the Igbo peoples.
- Falaka Armide is a graduate of the Fine Arts School in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. Exhibitions of his work have been shown in Ethiopia as well as abroad. His prints have also appeared in African Arts.
- Sanford Berman is librarian at the Makerere Institute of Social Research, Kampala, Uganda. He has served in libraries in the United States, Germany, and Zambia and has contributed articles, poetry, and reviews to a wide variety of journals. He has recently been named an 'editorial advisor' for the University of Ife Press' projected African Books in Print.
- Christopher Ehret is an assistant professor of African history at UCLA. He has published books and articles on the use of linguistics for the reconstruction of eastern and southern African history, including Southern Nilotic History (1971) and East Africans and Ethiopians (forthcoming).
- Raymond Ganga is a doctoral candidate in African history at UCLA. He has recently been awarded a Ford Foreign Area Fellowship and will be conducting his dissertation research in Sierra Leone.
- Talmy Givón teaches Linguistics and African Linguistics at UCLA. He was the founding editor of the journal Studies in African Linguistics and has done linguistic field work in Zambia.
- Norman Dean Haskett is currently a doctoral student in African history at UCLA. After receiving his B.A. degree in Anthropology at UCLA in 1967, he worked two years in northern Ghana as a cooperative officer.
- Uldis Krūze is a doctoral candidate in modern Chinese history at Indiana University and is presently doing research at the Center for Chinese Studies, U.C. Berkeley.
- John O'Sullivan is currently a doctoral student in African history at UCLA. He is concentrating on Ivorian resistance to the French at the end of the nineteenth century.
- Akin Olu Sanda is a Ph.D. candidate in sociology at UCLA. He received his B.S. at the University of Ibadan and has served as a research assistant in the Nigerian Institute of Social and Economic Research.