

Part III: Revisited Works

This image was taken in downtown Johannesburg on October 30th, 2014. It is a landscape that speaks to the political fantasy that I have that, as the billboard reads, "The People Shall Govern." In front of the billboard is an African man with what seems to be a lunch box or work bag walking to his destination. This image plays on the concept of "the people" (everyday working class people) ruling, or fighting for justice.

This image was taken November 18th, 2014, at Bree Taxi rank in downtown Johannesburg. The image captures four elder women, donning traditional attire, sitting at the taxi rank for hours. I wondered what they did all day, and whether being under the sun and simply being around others their age was their definition of a relaxing and good life.
